I know they were referring to design-spiration (dsp). They got the name from "designspiration", so I think they're doing the thing or the habit or the practice of getting inspired by other (mainly digital!) things and taking the ideas and implement it (try to implement) them, but it also shows that they just try to recreate other things and it works great for them (for the most of them). If you look at this short video (in your browser), you'll understand what the hell I'm talking about! (It's called Raw Gradients. Here are some very similar designs I've seen. I think you're just suggesting it's because you've seen all of Sam's and Maya's creations? That means ALL of Sam's and Maya's creations are awesome! Click to expand... If you already tried to find out what a Roblox generators are, then you are right. I tried those a few times but they were actually just robux generators. No free robux, no true features of a robux generator. A good Roblox robux generator has a few different things: • Each robux generator should work only one server – it is the feature that makes sure that you get free robux. The rest is your job and can be handled by any robux generator. • Your balance should be around 1,000-5,000 free robux – a free robux generator without a feature like this is really no free robux generator at all • Roblox should be the right choice for your robux generator. But if you really want to try a free robux generator, please read carefully: there is no such thing as a ROBUX GENERATOR without any hidden ties to your account! If you actually found a generator that looks a bit "consistent", you may do one of the following things: • Most likely the generator got its data from your account by stealing your password. • You can not access your account at all – as it is not possible to generate free robux without the use of password – which is called a "backdoor". • In the worst case you might actually be in a slave market. Some of the free robux generators are being sold and in most cases the market seller already got your account information – stolen! If you don't want to know which games or accounts are being used by a free robux generator you can try these features: • Check the log files. Usually they are in a hidden directory • In case you do not know where a directory is hidden, you can search for it. So, for example, if you want to find the hidden log folder, you would type the following in the search bar: "[directory] [@~]" After you found the directory or server you can check the different files for the free robux. You do this with the "search"-function or with a search bar. • In case you do not know how to search for the different free robux related files, there are two tools for that: The Shielded One and RoboDrop You can also try this concept: On your computer you create a new account. Try to get free

Open the app.Q: PDF I/O for 2D (vector) math library Apologies if this question is vague, but my goal is to maintain the mathematical fidelity of a table of values without having to first compute them. The idea is that table/array values can be marked as either being to be used in the following function or not, e.g.: double GetCurveValue(double f); double GetCurveValue (double f) { if(toBeUsed) { return USEVALUE; } else { return NOTUSEVALUE; } } It is the case that table/array values need to be checked for use in the function without having first computed them. I have looked at the Mathematica, SymPy and Python modules in 3D, but I'm getting a little lost because I don't have any real examples to illustrate my situation - just the one example table file I am trying to read. The function to be used would be part of a moderately large codebase written in C++. While the 3D vector math stuff has been pretty convenient with defining equations as containing [x, y, z] with '=' evaluating to a value (i.e. a matrix), it wouldn't be able to handle equations like: $$v_x = 0.5*v_x^2 - 8*v_y^2 + 5*v_z^2$$ because it's evaluating that to a value (and not replacing the $ with a function, e.g. I don't know if I can do (double) and C++ type conversion
